23 in court over lunch-hour demo

Twenty-three people have appeared in court following the protest demonstration in the Central Business District of Durban last Friday afternoon.

For more than a hour, the CBD became the scene of student-police confrontation as placard bearing students chanting protest songs, marched down West Street.

The march by about 1500 students mainly from the University of Durban-Westville and the University of Natal began in Field Street.

When the demonstrators reached the Checkers supermarket in West Street, they were confronted by police and Panic stricken students began running in all directions to avoid a teargas attack.

Students regrouped within minutes and chaos reigned as lunchtime shoppers jammed the street to get a glimpse of the action. Departmental stores, which are normally filled to capacity at that time of the day, were deserted.

Many, fearing that in the case of trouble their stores may be damaged closed their doors. The students demo also caused a major traffic jam.

The large contingent of police kept a low profile while the students remained in West Street but as the marchers streamed onto Field Street, followed by crowds of onlookers, police moved in on them.

As the chanters stationed themselves in front of the Bank Of Lisbon and protested against the bank's alleged support for apartheid scuffles broke out between the students and the police.

A number of protesters were grabbed by police and dumped into waiting police vans.

On Monday, 23 of the protesters appeared in the Durban Magistrate's Court on a charge of taking part in an illegal gathering. No charges were put to the accused and they were not asked to plead.

Bail was set at R100 each and the hearing was adjourned to August 23 for further investigations.

DEPARTMENTAL STORE FOR GREY ST. AREA

The Grey Street Complex is to get it's first departmental store in two months time when a specialized clothing store opens its doors.

"Jadwats", a clothing store, which will cater for the whole family, is set to open in October on the corner of Albert and Victoria Streets.

The Jadwats have been operating clothing stores for several years, but this is the first time that they have turned their attention to launching a departmental store.

The idea was born about two years ago when they realized the need for such a store in the Grey Street Complex.

The Grey Street Complex abuts the larger White Central Business District of Durban and is situated so that the Black consumer must for the most part pass through it to reach the White CBD, train, bus and taxi ranks are situated within or on the periphery of the Grey Street Complex, and business houses there have for several years relied on this passing trade.

"A potential flow daily through Grey Street to shop and work. It is our intention to attract this market to our department store" says Mr A.k. Jadwat.

SPECIALISE

"Jadwats" will specialise in retailing fashion clothing for the entire family, and will be aiming to attract customers of all races.

The move could signal the start of a new trend in the Grey Street Complex.

Hitherto shops in the area have tended to be small operations, dealing almost exclusively in one line of goods, either jewellery, or hardware, or electrical goods or mens or womens' clothes, and have maintained a character distinct from that of the departmental store environment of the White CBD.

"Jadwats" is the first major attempt to challenge the White CBD at its own game, and if successful could lead to other shopowners diversifying and operating from larger premises.

INANDA FAMILIES EAGER TO MOVE

By Fawzia Moodley

Leader / Casbah

Water constitutes a major problem to Inanda families. They buy it at 3 cents per 20 Litre drum and have to transport the water over long distances.

Indian families who are being moved out of Inanda to make way for an African township are facing the prospects of leaving the area of their birth with mixed feelings.

On the one hand, they are happy that their days of hauling water from communal taps or points of sale, and nights of burning lamps and candles, will soon be over.

Yet, they are sad at leaving the old familiar place that has been home to many of them for their entire lives.

“Our grandfather lived here and our parents were born here, I myself have known no other home besides Inanda. That is why we will leave this place with regret but we just cannot go on living here.

“The lack of lights and water had always made our lives difficult, but recently things have become worse because of the lack of security” said 23 year old Heeralall Rughubeer.

According to Mr Rughubeer and others interviewed by ‘The Leader’, Inanda had become an extremely unsafe place over the past year.

Robberies in broad daylight and car thefts at night had become a common feature and most people were too terrified to go on living there much longer.

Of the 900 odd families who will have to make way for the African township almost half have already left the area.

A large proportion of the remaining families consists of landowners who are awaiting payment of compensation by the State before moving.

COMPENSATION

Large tracts of land in Inanda is owned by joint families and most fear that the compensation they will get will be too small to enable them to build houses in an area of their choice.

“Officials who came around recently told us that we will be paid compensation for every tree, every plant on our property. Yet according to their valuation the five acres of land owned by a family is worth only R33 000” said the wife of a landowner in the area.

“When you consider that six of his brothers have to share in the land, and if we do get paid out R33 000 for the land, it means my husband will only get about R4 700 as his share” said the lady who did not want to be identified in the press.

She added that a private buyer had offered the family R7 000 for the house in which they lived and so, all in all they would get just about R8 000 in compensation.

“This amount will not even be sufficient to pay deposit on a decent house and so it seems we have no other option but to accept a house in Phoenix,” she said.

Ranisha Nepaul told The Leader that her family had been living in Inanda for nine years and because of the hardships, her widowed mother was looking forward to moving out of the area.

PAY MORE

The Nepauls who are state grantees will most probably be moved to a sub-economic flat in Phoenix where they will have to pay far in excess of the annual R50 rental they have been paying in Inanda.

Added to this disadvantage, the family which presently has a spacious five bedroomed house will have to adjust to living in smaller quarters, and will have to do without the large yard they now have.

But despite their natural dislike of being moved out of a settled area, most people in Inanda have now got to a stage where they are impatient to move out since they know that sooner or later the move will have to be made.

RENOVATED BUS RANK HAS NO FACILITIES

The renovated Durban bus rank opposite the Indian market has been welcomed by the bus drivers, conductors as well as the thousands of commuters, but they feel more attention could have been given to providing proper facilities there.

The thousands of people using the ranks daily will now be sheltered from the elements.

Construction workers have concluded the first phase of erection of the massive structure.

Buses no longer drop off their passengers at the bus rank. They are left about one hundred and fifty metres from the bus rank, making it difficult for commuters to cross the busy Warwick Avenue.

It is alleged that traffic police stand at the bus ranks across the road from the bus ranks issuing fines to drivers who insist on dropping off passengers at the stop.

The drivers now have to leave their passengers far from the ranks.

“Its is dangerous to drop off the passengers where the buses stop to refuel and wait their turn for the next loading time.

They are easy victims of robbers who hang around the ranks. As bus drivers we can protect them sometimes, but what happens if we are not there” a bus driver said.

“We really don’t mind leaving them at the bus rank but we cannot stop here”.

Only a few buses at a time may wait at the ranks at one time.

LOADING

The other buses wait at the service station where they drop off their passengers, and can only make their way to the ranks when it is their time to load the bus.

Passengers generally are nuisance at the rank, bus driver claim.

They wont board a bus that’s got no music or is not draped with curtains or one that is old.

“They want to travel in luxury. They stand in groups at the ranks waiting for a ‘pretty’ bus to get to the rank to start loading” one driver said.

A 65 year old grandmother, tired from her chores in the market and carrying parcels of fruit and vegetables sat on a car seat left there by a rank manager.

SEATS

“While commuters have seats at their bus stops, why can’t we” Mrs El-lama Chetty asked.

“The Corporation gave a pretty bus rank but at least they could provide seats for the passengers.

“We come tired from work and from our shopping, we must rest while waiting for our bus” she said.

She said she worked for about 33 years and for several years had taken the bus to her home in Unit 5, Chatsworth< and had waited in the sun and rain for a bus.

I am happy with the place but if they can provide seats for the Whites they can do it for us” Mrs Chetty said.

An Isipingo Hills mother, Mrs Howa Hoosen said she last went into town last month and last week was the first time she took a bus at the new rank.

COMFORTABLE

“The rank is much better now” she said.

“They can make this place more comfortable by providing seats for the passengers.

“I welcome this new rank but I must wait for a bus for another one hour.”

Another commuter who traveled on the bus to Chatsworth for about 20 years was concerned about the new rank.

He said it was possible the Corporation had built the rank to be taken over for the White community.

“I hope the Whites don’t take away the rank from us. We waited for it for about two decades now and we must resist all attempts by the Corporation to take away the rank

NEW ORLEANS SINK RANGERS

By Rabi Gobind

New Orleans of North Coast again proved to Natal soccer fans that they are one of the best soccer sides in the province, when they beat Bluff Rangers 1-0 at Curries Fountain on Sunday.

Rangers, who had put up a brilliant performance played New Orleans in the quarter finals of the SASF interclub knock-out cup competition. New Orleans now enters the semi-finals against Border club.

New Orleans and Bluff Rangers provided an exciting and entertaining goalless first half. Both sides played a fast running game.

New Orleans just got an edge on Bluff Rangers in the last 10 minutes of the game when Basil Hurst scored from a Winston Diplock pass.

New Orleans was well served by every player, but the brilliance of Kevin Pretorius at centre-half Morris Kast, was everywhere upfront and Winston Diplock made the difference between winning and losing.

Bluff Rangers tried every trick in the book but luck just kept on evading them.

Outstanding for Bluff Rangers were Bob Williams and his right half Raymond A.K. Adams, fresh from his professional stint with Tongaat Crusaders in the FPL, was playing very well in the Bluff Rangers goal before his sad exit from the field due to injury.
